CARA KERNOWEK VOCABULARY
WITH SPELLINGS IN THE INTERNATIONAL PHONETIC ALPHABET

Ian Jackson

Here is the vocabulary of the Cara Kernowek course written in the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA). Inflected forms are listed at the end on a lesson-by-lesson basis. All of the Cara Kernowek coursebooks are available on the lovinglivingcornish website, both as web text and in pdf format. Go to Cara Kernowek Book Four to find the entire cumulative vocabulary in one place, with all the definitions.

If you are not familiar with the IPA and are looking for the sounds associated with the various symbols, a good place to find comprehensive information is the Wikipedia article 'International Phonetic Alphabet'.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS

Contact with English in the increasingly bilingual environment of the late Middle Ages strongly influenced the pronunciation of Cornish. Primary stress typically on the penult is inherited from earlier Brythonic. But the process that we call the 'Prosodic Shift' shortened many stressed vowels, while reducing many vowels in unstressed syllables to schwa as also generally happens in English. Yet Cornish is at the same time distinctive because many stressed short vowels are likewise influenced by a following r-sound, which is always retroflex in traditional speech.

IPA symbols

Please bear in mind that the symbol for the short near-close front unrounded vowel [ɪ̞], which has bars at top and bottom, may be displayed in web text without its bars on some devices. Web text may also break a word spelled in IPA between two lines of text. If in any doubt, consult the pdf. For simplicity the symbols [ɨ] and [ʉ] have been employed for all i-coloured and u-coloured schwa; save for [ɨ] in word-final position these sounds will be realized most accurately as slightly lower [ɨ̞] (bars at top and bottom) and [ʉ̞]. The symbols [f] and [θ] have been preferred to [v̥] and [ð̥] where [v] and [ð] become voiceless in unstressed word-final position; this reflects the Standard Cornish spellings /f/ and /th/ for these sounds in this position.

Aspiration

Cornish voiceless stops [k] [p] [t] (except when preceded by [s] in the same word), voiceless sonorants [l̥], [n̥], [ɹ̥], and the voiceless glide [ʍ] are all accompanied by some degree of aspiration.

Syllabification

Words of more than one syllable (including words built with affixes) are typically divided in speech at the point(s) where each syllable after the first may begin with a consonant or a consonant cluster capable of occurring word-initially. But compound words (that is, words built from elements that may also stand alone) are divided at the point(s) of contact between those elements; and a prefix may be treated in the same way, especially when it is still easily recognized as an addition (the prefix das 'again' for example). Marks for primary and secondary stress in the listed entries have been positioned accordingly.

Primary and secondary stress

In a disyllabic word formed with a prefix the single (primary) stress on the first syllable can be seen as the operation of the general rule that stress typically falls on the penult. But the stress can be displaced to the second (final) syllable when that syllable is perceived to carry significantly more information that could be obscured in the reduction of the syllable to schwa if left unstressed. This phenomenon is especially true in the case of prefixes dy (di) 'without' and he 'readily'. In the listed entries stress is marked on the first syllable of such words, except when the great majority of speakers apply it to the second syllable.

The distribution of primary and secondary stress in compound words is rather variable. In particular the primary stress is frequently allocated to the first element of a disyllabic compound word. Again, this can be regarded as part of the general tendency to stress the penult. But for some words, not necessarily consistently, individual speakers may prefer to lay primary stress on the second element instead.

In actual speech a whole phrase may be pronounced with a single primary stress; any other stress will then be only secondary. This has been reflected for some idiomatic fixed phrases among the listed entries.

Long vowels

Long vowels in words that are not compounds have been marked in the listed entries with full length when these vowels carry primary stress and with half-length when they are unstressed, but the reduction in length in the latter case is somewhat variable in practice. And while stressed vowels in compound words, or carrying secondary stress within an utterance, are generally short without weakening, they may be pronounced with half or even full length wherever they are marked for length with a circumflex or spelled with a digraph.

Unstressed short vowels

In pre-tonic position where short vowels written /a/ /e/ /o/ are generally fully reduced and so realized as [ə], they may be preserved as unreduced [æ] [ɛ] [ɔ] by some speakers, not necessarily consistently. This can also occur in post-tonic position, but in that case the motive is usually to avoid homophony. Likewise, in the same positions, the short vowel written /i/ /u/ /y/ may be realized as [ɪ] (bars at top and bottom) and the short vowel written /ù/ may be realized as [ʊ]. In the listed entries these modifications have been explicitly noted only very occasionally.

Post-tonic dipthongs

The diphthongs [ɛʊ̯] and [oʊ̯] both tend towards [əʊ̯] or even just [ə] in post-tonic position. The distribution of the second person plural endings /ewgh/ and /owgh/ has been standardized in writing (though several standards compete); there is often no distinction in speech.

DIVERSITY IN PRONUNCIATION

Here are some common variant pronunciations. They apply generally, so have not been shown as specific alternatives in the listed entries.

(A)
For some speakers the sounds [ɪ] and [ɨ] become [ɛ] and [ə]. But this does not occur when [ɪ] and [ɨ] are spelled /u/. Whenever the spelling is /u/ some speakers substitute [y:] for [i:], [y] for [i], [ʏ] for [ɪ] or [ɨ]. This latter practice has been integrated into the listed entries (i) where /u/ immediately precedes another vowel, (ii) for the suffixes /us/ and /ury/, (iii) for plurals of nouns ending in /u/, and (iv) in a few specific instances to avoid homophony.

(B)
In today's Cornish there is much variation around mid vowels. Where close [e] and [o] are shown in the listed entries, it is not uncommon for speakers to substitute open [ɛ] and [ɔ] of appropriate length. But most agree that the vowel [ɔ], wherever it may be employed, is much less rounded than its counterpart in English.

(C)
Some speakers pronounce as [iʊ̯] the sound shown in the listed entries as [ɛʊ̯]. Conversely some speakers pronounce as [ɛʊ̯] the sound shown in the listed entries as [iʊ̯]; but this does not occur when [iʊ̯] is spelled with the single letter /u/.

(D)
When the sound shown in the listed entries as [oʊ̯] occurs at the end of a word (or comprises the entire word), it is pronounced by some speakers (1) as [u] when the preceding vowel-sound in the same word is [oʊ̯] or [u] and (2) as [ɒ] in other cases. When the sound shown in the listed entries as [oʊ̯] occurs before a consonant in the same word, it is pronounced by some speakers as [o:].

(E)
Some speakers apply the English Great Vowel Shift to Cornish vowels, especially in loan-words from English, but in native words too. Thus [æ:] or [æ] may be heard as [e:] or [ɛɪ̯], [i:] or [ɪ] or [ɪx] may be heard as [aɪ̯] or [ɜɪ̯], while [aɪ̯] itself may be heard as [e:] or [ɛɪ̯] or [ɜɪ̯].

(F)
Some speakers reduce to [h] the sound shown in the listed entries as [x]; for some this sound is silent, and a preceding [l̥] or [ɹ̥] will then become [l] or [ɹ].

(G)
When the sound shown in the listed entries as [θ] occurs after [ɹ̥], some speakers reduce it to [h]. When the sound shown in the listed entries as [ð] occurs after [ɹ], it is silent for some speakers.

(H)
When the sound shown in the listed entries as [s] occurs at the beginning of a word before a vowel, it is pronounced as [z] by some speakers. Many pronounce the combinations [lz] [nz] [ɹz] as [lz̥] [nz̥] [ɹz̥] in a stressed monosyllable, and the combination [nz] as [nz̥] at the end of any word. Some replace [z] with [z̥] at the end of a word after a diphthong. On the other hand there are speakers who substitute [z] for [z̥] in all words.

(I)
Some speakers devoice word-final [b] and word-final [g] of monosyllables to [p] and [k] respectively.

(J)
Many do not acknowledge the development of [ɒ:] from some instances of original *[a:]; these speakers employ [æ:] universally.

(K)
Many speakers do not recognize voiceless [l̥], [n̥], [ɹ̥], substituting the equivalent voiced sounds [l], [n], [ɹ]. But whereas voiceless [ʍ] is very frequently realized as voiced [w] in English, the voiceless sound is quite faithfully preserved in the Cornish of most speakers.

(L)
Those who learn Cornish while speaking English without a distinctive Cornish accent very often substitute alveolar [ɹ] for retroflex [ɻ]. And taps [ɾ] or trills [r] are sometimes heard under the influence of other Celtic languages or other accents of English. In these pronunciations any [ɜ] immediately preceding the substituted r-sound typically becomes [ɛ].

(M)
Finally it should be noted that some who have learned Cornish choose to apply a spelling pronunciation based on the 'Standard Written Form' (SWF) that is taught in certain classes. Since SWF is a less phonetic spelling system, leaning more heavily on etymology, such pronunciation contains elements characteristic of Cornish as spoken earlier than the fourteenth century. If you are attracted to this approach, you should seek further information from those who promote it.
