

Europe's Arctic Course

8 December 2010

Organised by the European Space Agency and the Institute for Environmental Security

European Space Agency, 8 December 2010
8-10 Rue Mario Nikis, 75738 Paris Cedex 15, France

The European Union is inextricably linked to the Arctic region... On the whole, Arctic challenges and opportunities will have significant repercussions on the life of European citizens for generations to come. It is imperative for the European Union to address them in a coordinated and systematic manner, in cooperation with Arctic states, territories and other stakeholders¹.

| OBJECTIVES |

- ✓ To provide an opportunity for experts from ESA Member States to exchange information and ideas on possible space systems (earth observation and remote sensing, communications and navigation) which can address the challenges in the Arctic in the future.
- ✓ To bring together policy makers and scientists for a multidisciplinary discussion on the environmental security challenges affecting the Arctic region - environment, climate change and the sustainable use of natural resources.
- ✓ To provide information to interested ESA Member States on the forthcoming European Parliament report on "A sustainable EU policy for the High North" and the preparations for the European Commission's June 2011 report to the Council of the European Union and the European Parliament on the European Union and the Arctic.
