Introduction

The world in which customs legislation operates is increasingly complex and, consequently, customs legislation itself tends to get quite complex, especially when it is intended to operate across several jurisdictions. Legislative complexity has long been an issue in the field of Customs. Complex customs legislation (and complex legislation in general) uses valuable resources due to the increased time taken by courts, advisers, administrators, the private sector operators involved in cross-border trade and the general public in reading and understanding the legislation.

The Centre for Customs and Excise Studies is pleased to offer the following special discounted rates to the readers of the Customs Compliance & Risk Management Journal:

2-Year Single User Licence 250 €
3- Year Single User Licence 350 €

For further information or to arrange a subscription, please contact CCES at customs@csu.edu.au

Following the introduction of the Union Customs Code (UCC), the public and private sectors have been looking for a smart way to navigate the complexity of the UCC, which must be read in conjunction with the Delegated Act, the Transitional Delegated Act and the Implementing Act

Traders and service providers are able to readily locate the legislative provisions that affect their business and minimize the risk of non-compliance leading to penalties and unplanned interruptions to trade. Similarly, professional and industry associations are able to provide their members with thoroughly researched advice quickly, efficiently and with confidence, and consultants are able to provide advice to their clients more quickly, efficiently and with greater confidence.
