

A World Built on Scarcity, Fear, and Emotional Immaturity

by Pedro Lima

An ego-based society commodifies life itself, people, homes, the Earth's resources, reducing everything into something to own, exploit, measure, and profit from.

It justifies shallow, insecure, self-serving, fear-driven systems built on scarcity, corruption, speculation, control, and deception, disguising egoic attachments as “order” and “success.”

Beneath these soulless frameworks lie unresolved emotional wounds, illusions rooted in lack, unworthiness, and the desperate need to be acknowledged, praised, validated, and seen by others.

A society disconnected from its Soul attaches its worth to narcissistic metrics: fame, power, status, hierarchy, forgetting that true value is born from inner sovereignty, not external approval.
