

A Civilization bound by fear, lack and complacency

by Pedro Lima

A society where a small “elite” hoards and controls the world’s resources while the rest survive on “breadcrumbs,” enslaved by indoctrinated scarcity attachments, trapped in fear-based narratives and conditioned habits of comparison, competition, and struggle, this is the architecture of a parasitic system. It is a hollow empire built for hollow kings and queens seated on soulless, greedy shallow thrones.

This is a civilization consumed by its own egoic delusions, shallow attachments, rooted in fear, lack, and unworthiness, subservient to a false authority that hides behind secrecy, corruption, deception, and manipulation. Through propaganda and psychological conditioning, it shapes the beliefs and behaviors of the collective, convincing them to betray themselves in exchange for a false sense of safety, order, comfort, identities.

Parasitic bureaucratic structures enforce compliance, coerce obedience, and punish authenticity. Anyone who refuses to bow, obey, or self-betray becomes a threat to the false hierarchy. The system thrives by diminishing, deceiving, and undermining the inner voice of the collective, blocking inner sovereignty at its roots.

The tragedy is not only about how a mediocre system thrives by enslaving the collective with its complacency, it is the collective compliance that sustains it. Blind obedience, submissiveness, and the fear of confronting one’s own shadow keep people bound. A society unwilling to look within cannot recognize its indoctrination, its inherited beliefs, its self-betraying narratives, or the cultural fear-programming that shackles its consciousness.

True liberation begins with the courage to see clearly from within, to shed layer by layer of conditioning, to dismantle the illusions of fear and unworthiness, and to reclaim one’s inner authority. When individuals remember their authenticity and sovereignty, the parasitic structures of false control lose their power.

Inner sovereignty is not granted, it is remembered, reclaimed, and embodied from within.
