

False Thrones, Hollow Souls, and the Law of Accountability

by Pedro Lima

An ego-based, petty, narcissistic society hides behind carefully curated identities, roles, titles, and false hierarchies, propped up by pride, entitlement, delusional ignorance, and hollow, self-serving beliefs. These structures feed parasitic behaviors, obsessive false oligarchical control, deceptive narratives, exploitative stories, and soulless agendas. Such societies seek to enforce, coerce, sustain, and normalize indoctrinated systems of false authority figures and institutions designed to bind, mold, and enslave others through fear, scarcity, obedience, codependency, compliance, subservience, and punishment.

Speculative, cunning, surface-level, parasitic ideologies and dogmas are disseminated at every level of society. Propaganda normalizes self-deception, self-betrayal, blind dependence, misplaced trust, obedience, submission, and subservience to people and institutions. In the process, the inner sovereign and authentic voice is stripped away, sacrificed for the illusion of belonging, safety, comfort, and order.

These greedy, soulless, feudal, and colonial hierarchies demand that many dim their inner light so a few may dictate who others are allowed to be, what they may do, and how they should live. They bind the collective to corrupt mediocre narratives fueled by profit, exploitation, and control at the cost of widespread misery, ignorance, suppressed consciousness, and coerced conformity.

A bureaucratic, soulless maze of laws, rules, norms, and policies is upheld by greedy institutions that market debt as salvation. The masses operating from lack, fragility, codependency, and egoic attachments are conditioned into consumerism driven by fear, envy, jealousy, unworthiness, trends, and illusion. Lacking inner substance, they compare, compete, and chase hollow validation, “keeping up with the Joneses” to temporarily anesthetize inner emptiness.

Within this hollow hierarchy where money and profit are worshipped as markers of worth, and truth, false identities and delusional stories are meticulously crafted. Emotionally insecure and spiritually empty games are played through manipulation, deception, and control. A few sit on hollow thrones, intoxicated by pride and the illusion of power, using status and dominance to justify exploitation and the enslavement of the collective. All of this hides behind moral hypocrisy, masquerading as democracy, freedom, order, and safety, portraying themselves as saviors while remaining the true perpetrators of ignorance, deception, and spiritual impoverishment.

But each of us remains accountable for our own energy. We cannot hide behind ignorance or excuse our lack of spiritual growth and evolution. What we do consciously or unconsciously to diminish others carries karmic consequence.

The wheel of karma never stops turning. When the energies we have emitted return, they strip away egoic illusions, curated attachments, titles, and identities. In that moment, rather than collapsing into bitterness or self-victimization, we are given a choice: to meet reality with discernment, courage, integrity, and accountability.

The self-victimized individual perceives karma as punishment, filtered through fear-based, ego-tainted lenses because they lack the emotional maturity and inner depth required to confront their own self-deception, self-betrayal, and toxic behaviors.

We always reap what we have sown, precisely, inevitably, and in divine order and alignment.
