

This is a mirror to a society refusing to heal what it projects

by Pedro Lima

A society wounded by its own reflection builds curated, fragmented inner avoidance walls and calls them identity, safety, and culture.

*It wears hollow crowns and calls them authority,
and mistakes herd popularity for truth and justice.*

*It indoctrinates not to liberate,
but to control, exploit, and dominate.*

*Through dogma, ideology, hierarchy, identity, fear,
and a maze of bureaucratic laws,*

*It trains obedience, rehearses submission,
and glorifies compliance and subservience.*

*What it projects outward, unworthiness, lack, dependency,
are the very wounds it refuses to take accountability for,
and therefore refuses to heal within.*

*It hides behind curated, deceptive false identities and roles,
behind moral self-righteous hypocrisy and fragile masks of power,
constructed to sustain the survival, avoidance of its own inner collapse, its fear of vulnerability, and its deep-rooted terror of insignificance.*

*When these false, fragmented masks are stripped away,
What remains is exposure, raw, unapologetic, undeniable truth.*

*This is not strength.
This is avoidance.
This is ignorance.*

This is the refusal to self-confront and take responsibility for a fractured, delusional, distorted, and an emotionally dysfunctional, unintegrated inner world.

“Projection is how fear pays its way when the inner world remains unintegrated.” - Pedro
