

Surveillance, Parasitism, and the Karmic Mirror of a Narcissistic Society

by Pedro Lima

A narcissistic society curates fragmented frameworks, rules, norms, beliefs, habits, and paradigms, not to foster truth or inner coherence, but to validate fear, insecurity, unresolved trauma, and inner disconnection.

It fears everyone and everything.

It demands surrender, submission, compliance to curated false identities, titles, and fear-based conditioning stories.

To sustain this inner fragmentation, it builds a parasitic surveillance state, not only institutional, but psychological and social, where individuals police, monitor, judge, and coerce one another. This mutual surveillance is not order; it is spiritual avoidance.

Avoidance of the elephant in the room.

Rather than face inner chaos, trauma, and unworthiness, the collective projects outward, dumping fear, distortion, dysfunction and self-betrayal onto others. Control, manipulation, exploitation, and domination become coping mechanisms for fragile, hollow identities terrified of insignificance.

Until an individual takes radical ownership of their inner world, of the energies they put out to the Universe, the intentions they hold, and the harm they externalize, they remain bound by their own attachments, addictions, obsessions, and parasitic survival strategies.

Parasitism seeks hosts.

Ignorance seeks justification.

Entitlement seeks exemption.

But no one is exempt from karmic consequence.

The Karmic CCTV

While society obsesses over surveillance, control, and judgment, something far more precise is always recording: karma.

Every intention.

Every manipulation.

Every act meant to diminish another.

The karmic field does not forget.

It does not negotiate.

It restores balance, unexpectedly, undeniably, and unforgettably.

I take full responsibility for my inner world.

No one else is responsible for it.

I mind my own business, staying in my own lane to learn, grow, expand, evolve and ascend on my alchemical self-remembrance journey.

Ignorance is a choice.

Karmic justice is not.

We always reap what we have sown.
