

When Self-Betrayal Becomes Normalized in a Parasitic Narcissistic Hollow Delusional Society

by Pedro Lima

A parasitic, oligarchical, oppressive societal system sustains itself through individual self-deception, self-betrayal, comfort and dependence-seeking, and complacency to avoid taking self-responsibility.

It conditions people to outsource their identity, meaning, purpose, and validation of existence to external authority, trading inner sovereignty for the illusion of safety, belonging, and acceptance.

This corrupt and hollow system justifies itself through distorted, corrupt narratives of order, justice, security, culture, family, and progress, while operating through secrecy, deception, coercion, tyranny, indoctrination, exploitation, surveillance, and financial speculation, and calls it freedom and democracy.

Its manipulative, parasitic, self-serving, delusional paradigms are cloaked as a virtue, framed as a necessity, and are normalized as “this is the way things were, are, and will be.”

Those who occupy positions of perceived power within this structure present themselves as holy, righteous, untouchable, and unquestionable paladins of truth, authority, and wisdom.

But their authority is not rooted in integrity or service; it is rooted in accumulation, hoarding, and domination at the expense of collective well-being.

The unspoken doctrine in this parasitic societal system is simple:

I am in power. I call the shots. I define what is normal.

I bend others to my fragile, insecure, and fragmented false sense of self.

I dictate, coerce, and bind others into hollow, self-serving frameworks that preserve my position while avoiding accountability.

This soulless system suppresses, punishes, undermines, conditions, and harms not because it is powerful, but because it is terrified of irrelevance, exposure, and inner reckoning.

Its cruelty is not authority.

Its rigidity is not order.

Its dominance is not a strength.

Parasitic power cannot exist without consent.

It feeds on normalized submission, subservience, enslavement, internalized obedience, and the quiet abandonment and betrayal of an individual's inner authentic sovereign truth.

It survives only as long as individuals accept comfort over conscious awareness, dependency over inner discernment, inner clarity and compliance over inner sovereignty, and self-sufficiency.

What is labeled as “normal” in this societal parasitic system, consumed by fear, scarcity, conflict, and division, is merely the agreement of collective self-betrayal and self-abandonment.

The moment inner authority is reclaimed. The moment self-deception is dissolved through inner discernment, self-awareness, and self-accountability, the parasitic system cannot find its host.

Not through rebellion. But through the withdrawal of consent.

Through inner clarity. Through self-accountability. Through self-remembrance.

I do not compromise my inner sovereign, authentic inner voice truth for anyone or any societal system, curated cultural identity, ideology, dogma, paradigm, role or status.
