

A Society That Feeds, Never Gives - How Parasitism Replaces Reciprocity

by Pedro Lima

Reciprocity is something a transactional, parasitic, narcissistic society knows nothing about.

The objective number one, two, and three in this surface-level, speculative, prideful, ignorant, scarcity-and fear-driven delusional society, when engaging with others, is always the same:

How can I benefit from others?

What can I extract?

How much energy, resources, profit can I take to soothe my never-fulfilled, petty, bitter, egoic, self-preserved survival consciousness programming?

In this self-victimized society by choice, fear, pride, ignorance, speculation, greed, envy, jealousy, comparison, and competition to win at any cost are perpetuated through corrupt, hollow, controlling, exploitative, parasitic frameworks, bureaucratic oligarchical systems of oppression, and domination.

Those at the top of the chain dictate, impose, enforce, and coerce. They diminish free will, accumulate and hoard, and construct hollow, soulless frameworks, institutions, corporations, and false empires while a docile, submissive, obedient, compliant, and subservient collective agrees and consents to be exploited and conditioned at the cost of their own well-being.

These hollow parasitic thrones are disguised as pentacles of truth, justice, order, safety, security, wisdom, science, health, knowledge, and almighty authority, while operating as engines of parasitic hollow extraction.

Indoctrination becomes the tool used to train individuals to obey, to self-betray, and to abandon inner authority in order to please and appease others.

Frameworks, propaganda, and carefully curated narratives bind the collective to identities, ideologies, dogmas, and cultural paradigms designed to induce division, conflict, compliance and dependency.

A culture of comparison, competition, hustling, and external validation is normalized.

Individuals are conditioned to self-betray in order to fit into predefined, hollow careers and education systems that exist to craft obedient and subservient individuals that fit the hollow system needs, perpetuating a culture of exploitation of the many by the few.

Those who control perceived systems of governance, the same hollow beings who lie, deceive, manipulate, coerce, punish, perform to impress, censor, target anyone who refuses to bow to false authority. Anyone who questions curated corrupt hollow institutions designed to surveil, indebt, extract, surveil and enslave is labeled dangerous, a threat to the dysfunctional, distorted and chaotic disorder disseminated at all levels of society.

Debt becomes a leash.
Jobs become cages.
Anxiety becomes normal.
Stress becomes productivity.
Life force becomes harvestable.

Human life becomes commodified, and where an individual worth and existence is attached to strings of approval by parasitic entitled hollow people and systems of misgovernance.

The collective consents actively and passively to being controlled, exploited, and dominated.

It monitors, surveils, and polices itself as an extension of the parasitic institutional establishment.

Out of envy and jealousy, it gaslights, judges, censors, undermines, and attempts to bend others into conformity.

Anyone who seeks to break free exposes the herd's own insignificance and unresolved wounds, triggering mob behavior fueled by bitterness, anger, pettiness, chaos, drama, and thirst for punishment.

Like parasites desperate for attention, they seek to be seen, liked, praised, and validated, projecting unresolved trauma onto others rather than cultivating within courage, discernment, accountability, emotional and spiritual maturity.

Reciprocity is foreign to a parasitic society that chooses to remain bound to self-conditioning.

A society trapped in a restless "monkey mind", busy, distracted, confused, deceptive, obsessed and addicted to control rather than tending to its own inner work.

Instead of alchemizing pain, it projects it.

Instead of transcending conditioning, it reinforces it.

Instead of growing, it consumes to remain stagnant in mediocrity, misery, and self-victimization.

A society incapable of genuine, authentic reciprocity is immature, is hollow, lacking inner substance, and it remains trapped precisely because it refuses to mind its own energy, stay in its own lane, and take responsibility for the inner work required to evolve beyond parasitic energetic low levels of consciousness.

What goes around, comes around. We always reap what we sow.
