

The Distorted and Dysfunctional Commodification of “Love” in a Parasitic Narcissistic Society

by Pedro Lima

In a parasitic, narcissistic society, love is reduced to a word, defined in dictionaries, categorized, labeled, justified, and commodified. It is stripped of its raw essence and rooted instead in hollowness and self-victimization. Love becomes something conditional, something meant to complete another, something to create dependency on another, something to chase externally rather than embodied.

In this delusional, surface-level, pride-driven society, love is treated as a feeling or an emotion to crave, pray for, chase, and seek in others, believed to be the missing piece that will finally make one happy, fulfilled, and whole. It becomes a performative egoic projection surface for unresolved unworthiness, emotional dependency, and spiritual immaturity. The fragile, insecure narcissistic psyche perceives “the other” as the savior meant to rescue it from its own self-misery, self-mediocrity, self-conditioning, emotional immaturity, self-sabotage, and spiritual impoverishment.

Within this curated egoic fragmented societal dynamics distortion, love becomes a source of supply.

It is owned, controlled, manipulated, punished when not reciprocated, extracted from, and discarded once depleted. When nothing more can be harvested from a soul, the parasitic identity reshapes itself, curated, performative, fragmented, searching for the next source of validation, energy, and emotional extraction.

In a parasitic narcissistic hollow society, love is normalized as one-sided giving, giving, giving, giving, while others take, take, take. Consent is assumed. Entitlement is normalized. Integrity and dignity toward another’s energy are absent. Love becomes transactional, something to be searched for, chased, bought, lusted after, and leveraged. It is framed as devotion while operating as a parasitic hollow domination.

This distortion survives through self-betrayal, the abandonment of one’s authentic self, the dimming of inner truth, the suppression of a soul’s sovereign blueprint. Individuals are conditioned to override self-sufficiency, self-validation, self-acceptance, and self-accountability in order to maintain attachment, approval, and belonging within hollow systems and relationships at all levels of society.

A sovereign soul sees through these petty and delusional egoic manipulative, deceptive games.

A sovereign soul recognizes the parasitic emotional and psychological entanglements, the petty egoic binding mechanisms disguised as love. It has the spiritual discernment, courage, and strength to set clear boundaries with anyone who feels entitled to its energy.

A sovereign soul withdraws consent from anyone and anything that seeks to control, manipulate, or extract from its essence. It does not compromise its inner authority, authenticity, or truth to appease or please another.

A sovereign soul knows that the low-vibrational societal narratives of love, rooted in dependency, ownership, fear, and entitlement, do not resonate at a soul level.

Love is not something to demand from another.

It is not something to own.

It is not something to chase to feel complete.

Love is unconditional, sovereign, authentic, and whole as it is, when a soul takes responsibility for its own inner state and refuses to participate in surface-level, codependent, performative cultural parasitic illusions.

A sovereign soul does not allow access to its sacred energy without conscious agreement and consent.

Love is not a commodity.

It is not a feeling to exploit.

It is not an emotional leash.

Love is liberating. Raw. Grounded in dignity, integrity, mutual authentic sovereignty, respect, acceptance, and genuine reciprocity.

Anything that requires self-betrayal or dependency is not love; it is parasitic hollow extraction.

“In parasitic narcissistic societies, love becomes a transactional hollow ritual where unhealed inner emptiness feeds on another’s light to survive.” – Pedro
