

Beyond Flags and Force - Remembering Sovereignty in a Narcissistic Parasitic World Consumed by Illusions

by Pedro Lima

A narcissistic, parasitic society sustains itself through indoctrination and curated performative fragmented perception. It disseminates binding narratives designed to influence, manipulate, and condition individuals into confusing imposed constructs with identity.

Nationality is elevated to a false aura of belonging. Power built through military force is framed as legitimacy. Domination, colonization, exploitation and control are normalized as order, while the reality of karmic consequence is denied or externalized.

Within this framework, human beings are reduced to commodities. Life force is harvested through labor, while worth is measured by the hollow paradigms of a Ponzi hierarchical status quo. At the top of this institutional and corporate Ponzi structure sit figures attached to titles, roles, and authority over others, mistaking a role, a title for power, lacking inner substance.

Their dominance is not rooted in wisdom, truth, integrity, authenticity or sovereignty, but in fear: fear of irrelevance, fear of insignificance, fear of being exposed as empty once the badges, titles, roles are removed. Pride becomes a self-preservation armor. Ignorance becomes an identity. Control becomes an obsession and parasitic addiction.

These hollow systems dictate, define, measure, and validate others precisely because those at the top lack the capacity to validate themselves. They require obedience and subservience to feel real, hierarchy to feel superior, and compliance to mask the lack of inner substance.

But no authority derived from force is legitimate.

No identity imposed from outside is sovereign.

No system that feeds on fear can escape karmic consequence.

What is forgotten in such societies is simple and destabilizing:

True power cannot be taken, enforced, or inherited.

It emerges from inner coherence, integrity, and responsibility for one's inner world.

When individuals withdraw belief from the indoctrinated conditioning propaganda and stop outsourcing identity, the illusion begins to crack, fade.

When souls remember that worth is intrinsic and unquantifiable, the hierarchy loses its oxygen. When presence replaces obedience, the system is revealed for what it is, an empty parasitic structure held together by fear and collective consent and agreement.

This is not a call to rebellion, but to self-remembrance.

Not to resistance, but to inner clarity.

Not to hate, but to inner discernment.

A society built on fear, pride and ignorance collapses not through violence, but when truth is no longer conditional and negotiable within the true authentic self.

No flag can define a soul.

No force can grant legitimacy.

No hierarchy can measure worth.

When fear is alchemized, hollow authority collapses.

When identity is remembered, reclaimed, the curated illusion of nationality=identity dissolves.

Sovereignty was never taken, it was only forgotten within all the layers of unintegrated egoic conditioning, and fear.
