

Why Narcissistic Parasitic Hollow Systems Cannot Survive Self-Accountability

by Pedro Lima

A narcissistic, parasitic, surface-level society consciously and unconsciously co-creates a framework of victimhood rooted in egoic self-conditioning and survival-fear-based beliefs.

This framework legitimizes pettiness, bitterness, envy, jealousy, resentment, shame, guilt, sorrow, emotional and spiritual impoverishment through self-inflicted misery, mediocrity, and self-sabotage intentions born from fear, scarcity, unworthiness, and inner hollowness.

Through indoctrinated beliefs, ideologies, dogmas, cultural norms, shame, and guilt-based narratives, individuals are conditioned to seek external approval merely to exist.

The herd self-victimized mentality enforces obedience, compliance, subservience, and submission to others expectations, opinions, emotions, and parasitic, self-serving agendas, demanding self-betrayal as the price of belonging and acceptance of the herd.

In this hollow societal parasitic structure, individuals are rewarded and praised when they suppress their innate capacity to self-heal, self-regulate, self-validate, and self-create from inner alignment.

They are discouraged from trusting their own moral compass, from becoming present observers of their thoughts, intentions, emotions, actions, and choices. But within every individual resides a divine universal spark, a unique soul frequency and energetic blueprint waiting to be activated through conscious inner work and the alchemy of low-frequency parasitic conditioning.

We are born with free will and the power of choice. In every moment, we choose where to place our focus, attention, and intention. We can co-create from fear and survival, or from purpose and alignment with our soul's sovereign core values, shedding what binds, manipulates, deceives, and demands self-betrayal to appease or please others.

In this society, self-responsibility and self-accountability are denied, avoided, and rejected at all costs.

Relationships become purely transactional, hollow, and conditional, valued only when dominance, superiority, control, lust, exploitation, or what can I gain from it. Moral delusional hypocrisy, curated fakeness, and performative deceptive facades are normalized and institutionalized as social hollow currency.

Illusions are perpetuated. Pain and suffering are normalized. Conflict and division are culturalized, ensuring fragmented identities and false roles sustain themselves through chaos, drama, deception, manipulation, speculation, exploitation, and control.

Human life is commodified to legitimize parasitism within corrupt, hidden parasitic hollow oligarchical clubs, where insecure, fragile, hollow soulless beings hoard wealth and power through the exploitation of the many.

But none of this survives without the agreement and consent of the many.

The moment a soul withdraws its agreement, choosing self-accountability over victimhood, inner authority over external validation, inner sovereignty over submission, the entire parasitic societal hollow structure begins to collapse. It is inevitable.
