

How False Authority Survives Through Normalized Individual and Collective Self-Betrayal

by Pedro Lima

A narcissistic, parasitic, ego-based society indoctrinates hierarchical, hollow frameworks, ideologies, paradigms, dogmas, and delusional middle-man stories, enforcing and demanding the self-betrayal of souls in order to belong to a culture that defines individual identity through a taxpayer number, nationality, name, role, and labor. Human worth is categorized, measured, and ranked through a hollow, corrupt, hypocritical moral-superiority status quo, attributing badges of merit to those who obey, comply, conform, and choose subservience to parasitic, hierarchical systems rooted in pride, entitlement, ignorance, arrogance, greed, hypocrisy, deception, manipulation, exploitation, control, and oligarchical domination.

In this hollow society, individuals and groups are required to answer to ranks, titles, badges, and false authorities, navigating carefully curated bureaucratic mazes of binding laws, norms, policies, rules, and governance structures designed to coerce, punish, shape perception, and enforce self-betrayal, conditioning people to be docile, obedient, compliant, submissive, and subservient to fragmented, parasitic structural systems of misgovernance.

This hierarchical Ponzi scheme is normalized, accepted, and collectively consented to by the many driven by egoic fear, scarcity, unworthiness, confusion, doubt, and dependence on the validation and approval of false authority figures, the so-called “leaders,” who claim entitlement to dictate and give permission for who others can be, what they can do, and how they may exist and live.

A docile herd accepts this gracefully, bowing, surveilling, monitoring, policing, and regulating one another, collaborating with and defending the very hollow systems that strip them of inner authority, authentic sovereign truth, and inner voice. Questioning is discouraged, dissent punished, ostracized and authentic inner sovereignty framed as threat, dangerous.

The herd self-betrays to belong to the parasitic liars club, wishing and wanting to be granted the conditional privileges of identification, passports, and membership out of a lack of self-sovereignty, self-reliance, self-validation, and self-accountability for their own emotional and spiritual inner state. They accept exploitation, the harvesting of their life-force through labor, surviving paycheck to paycheck to pay bills and consume, feeding a greedy, soulless corporate world that thrives on debt, misery, conflict, division and mediocrity of the many.

The many, as both passive and active participants in this petty hollow game, are co-responsible for sustaining this parasitic institutional landscape. Their inner worlds remain fixated on petty, surface-level attachments, fear-based comparison, competition, and the pursuit of hierarchical ascent, striving to please those perceived above them in exchange for approval, access, and a hollow seat at the table of insecure, curated hollow elites.

In this shallow society, human life is commodified. Accumulation of money, status, and material possessions is glorified as the pinnacle of success, power, and evolution. Frameworks are built where the few hoard resources while the many carry the burdens, remain dependent on the goodwill of bosses, managers, masters, authority of so-called leaders, those falsely perceived as powerful.

Illusions are celebrated, glorified, and defended by a submissive herd that adopts victimhood, chooses sides, and fights for the very systems that bind, drain, and enslave them.

A herd that surrenders inner authority, outsourcing it to false authority figures, choosing comfort and complacency over courage, self-deceiving and self-betraying to avoid responsibility for their own inner state, intentions, emotions, choices, and actions, for their own self-independence, self-liberation, to fully express themselves from inner coherence, guided by their own inner compass to live authentically, with integrity, honor, dignity, integrating all parts of self, taking responsibility for their own inner healing, remembering and reclaiming their true identity, who they truly are beneath all layers of conditioning, all layers of illusion of separation and polarity.

This system persists and sustains itself not because it is legit but because it is consented to.

It survives through obedience, fear, subservience and avoidance of self-accountability.

It collapses the moment inner authority is remembered and reclaimed by the Soul.

No hollow hierarchy withstands a Soul sovereign presence.
