

The Relentless Attempt to Domesticate the Human Spirit in Narcissistic Parasitic Self-Victimized Societies

by Pedro Lima

A narcissistic, parasitic society seeks to domesticate the human spirit.

It does so through subtle and overt mechanisms of conditioning, social expectations, performative hypocritical disguised as virtue, fear of rejection, economic dependence, and narratives that reward compliance while quietly punishing authenticity and self-sufficiency, self-sovereignty.

Over time, these hollow parasitic societal indoctrinating systems encourage individuals to abandon their inner authority.

They normalize self-betrayal in exchange for approval, belonging, security, or status.

People are conditioned to appease, please, and soothe the egos of others rather than remain anchored in truth, integrity.

But this domestication has limits.

No individual or system can truly corrupt a soul that remembers, and stands strong on its inner compass guidance, reliance, trust and validation.

A soul that refuses to compromise its inner peace.

A soul that cultivates self-regulation instead of emotional dependency.

A soul that develops self-sufficiency rather than relying on external validation.

A soul that holds itself accountable for its own inner state instead of projecting responsibility outward.

A soul that remembers gradually peels away the layers of societal programming, roles, identities, expectations, opinions, judgments, inherited fears, and cultural binding illusions until they remember and embody who they truly are beneath them.

Once that remembrance occurs, the mechanisms of manipulation begin to lose their influence and power.

Shame loses its grip.

Flattery loses its hypocritical inauthentic seduction.

Fear loses its control, authority.

Because the individual no longer participates in the silent agreement that sustains the parasitic narcissistic hollow societal system: the agreement to betray oneself in order to belong.

A parasitic system ultimately feeds on one thing above all else, voluntary self-abandonment.

When a person withdraws consent, attention, participation and stands rooted in self-awareness, discernment, authenticity, integrity, and inner sovereignty, the hollow societal hierarchical Narcissistic Ponzi system will attempt to put pressure, persuasion, or punishment to keep others in line, but it can no longer domesticate a sovereign authentic soul who is present, embodies its inner knowing, wisdom, transcending any internal and external conditioning.

The great deception of every parasitic societal system is convincing individuals that their power lies outside of themselves.

But the moment a Soul remembers who they are beneath conditioning, fear, and inherited illusions, the spell begins to break.

A sovereign soul cannot be domesticated because it no longer seeks permission to exist in truth. It no longer negotiates its integrity for belonging, and when enough souls remember this, the foundations of every hollow distorted fear-based system begin to tremble, not through force or rebellion, but through something far more powerful: the quiet refusal to abandon and betray oneself.
