

Self-Victimization Is The Currency of Illusion And Projection In Narcissistic Spiritually Impoverished Societies

by Pedro Lima

In narcissistic, parasitic, hollow, dysfunctional, fear-based societies, self-victimization becomes the normalized and institutionalized cultural currency for hollow projection, where insecure, fragile, self-conditioned beings cast upon others the unresolved emotions, feelings, thoughts, and attachments to pain, suffering, and prideful ignorance that are triggered within themselves, feeling and being offended when someone mirrors authenticity, sovereign truth to them.

Through this outward hollow, fragile projection, thoughts, intentions, words, and actions are used to bind, control, and manipulate, creating havoc, chaos, disruption, and destruction toward those perceived as superior, more aware, more intellectually, emotionally, or spiritually advanced.

There is an addiction to undermining, dimming, and diminishing others soul ascension paths, fixating on others' "business," seeking to know what others are doing or planning, not from curiosity, but from deep-rooted spiritual impoverishment, ignorance, illiteracy, malice, insignificance, and irrelevance.

From this space, they plot, lie, deceive, gaslight, gossip, blame, judge, and gather in petty, bitter collectives, attempting to cast "spells" to impose distorted and dysfunctional narratives to bring others down, to gain the upper hand, to control, to bind, and to keep others dependent on the hollow, insecure, parasitic identities of these fragile, deeply insecure beings.

But clinging to spiritual ignorance is a self-inflicted choice, and with choice comes consequences. For entitled, narcissistic, psychopathic, dysfunctional beings, these consequences are labeled as "bad," "unfair," or "why me?," revealing a refusal to take accountability for the intentions and actions cultivated from within when karma hits them.

Karma never misses. It always will bring swiftly and undeniably the very energies one chooses to project upon others.

All the darkness, chaos, and fear projected onto others with ill intention, praying, wishing, casting, and seeking harm, becomes a mirror of their lack of spiritual self-integrity, self-honor, self-dignity, self-respect, and self-responsibility. Behind all the carefully curated, fragmented identities, roles, beliefs, behaviors, and stories lies a system of self-conditioning, driven by survival, self-preservation, and hypocritical narratives that avoid honest self-reflection, self-awareness, self-healing, self-integration, self-accountability, and self-acceptance.

There is a refusal to grow, expand, and move beyond the fear-based, mental-rational cage that perpetuates spiritual disconnection, obedience, dependency, compliance, subservience, and submission, rooted in comparison, competition, and the need to “win” at any cost. Conflict becomes normalized through divisive ideologies, dogmas, and cultural paradigms, reinforcing attachments to illusions of hierarchy, superiority, and authority.

In this societal hollow, desolated landscape, individuals diminish themselves, dim their light by self-abandoning and self-betraying to belong, appease, and please, sacrificing their soul’s evolution to reach the illusionary pinnacle of a spiritually impoverished society driven by status, fame, power, consumerism, control, domination, hoarding, and wealth built upon the exploitation of others’ well-being.

Rather than turning inward, minding their own path, doing the inner work, mastering the self in all aspects, these patterns endure and perpetuate karmic cycles by choice. Attachments to unresolved pain, trauma, suffering, and self-conditioned beliefs keep individuals immersed in spiritual ignorance, disconnected from their own authentic, sovereign light.

That light, the one that does not need permission to exist or survive, is the same essence that takes full accountability for its inner world, for the energy it embodies and expresses. It is eternal, not bound by parasitic, hollow, narcissistic constructs of superiority, hierarchy, or external validation.

This reveals the true nature of a desolated, distorted, dysfunctional societal landscape built on fear, scarcity, speculation, and hollow hierarchical Ponzi systems sustained by collective consent.

A society shaped by spiritual ignorance and the lack of courage and discernment required to truly know oneself beyond layers of programming, illusion, and curated identities constructed for survival and performance.

What is hidden in the shadows will always surface to be seen, processed, and integrated. There is no escape from the self, only the courage to face, feel, learn, grow, expand, and evolve through what has been suppressed, without judgment, just as it is.

There is no escape from ourselves, no matter how much we distract, abandon, betray, stay busy, seek sympathy, or hide behind masks of deception, manipulation, and control. These masks only sustain distortion, dysfunction, illusion, disconnection, and self-created suffering.

Life is not difficult or easy; it simply is. The more we attempt to micromanage, control, scapegoat, and force outcomes, the more we reinforce experiences that will mirror us the very same patterns of spiritual impoverishment we seek to escape.

When we do not release what no longer serves our soul’s growth, we consciously choose self-diminishment, self-abandonment, and self-betrayal, clinging to fragmented identities, beliefs, and stories to avoid the discomfort of raw, authentic truth.

True alignment requires presence, inner coherence, and the courage to embody authenticity unapologetically, without fear of external judgment, without compromising inner peace, and without surrendering inner authority to appease or please others.

Our experiences do not mirror what we wish to be, or have; they reflect what we are in each moment. They reveal the masks we wear to belong, to be accepted, loved, praised, and validated externally, rather than cultivating self-validation, self-sufficiency, self-reliance, self-regulation, self-accountability, and sovereignty grounded in inner knowing, wisdom, and truth.

The path forward is simple but uncompromising: observe without distortion, feel without avoidance, take full responsibility for your inner world, regulate your energy with awareness, release what is not yours, and embody your truth with integrity. This is the map back to Soul's authentic sovereign inner authority.
