

Hierarchy in Narcissistic Parasitic Hollow Societies that Feed on the Betrayal of the Self to Survive and Sustain Fragmented Identity Curated Illusions

by Pedro Lima

Hierarchy arises in polarized, narcissistic, ego-based societies that curate fragmented self-identities, attachments to egoic, self-preserving personality constructs designed to mask and avoid accountability for one's inner world state.

Within these hollow, fear-based societal scarcity frameworks, driven by comparison, competition, and the need to win at any cost, individuals wear curated facades that disguise deception and manipulation to feel seen, heard, and valued. Beneath it all lies a desperate attempt to feel relevance and significance by controlling, exploiting, and dominating others, feeding a fragile, insecure sense of self and a parasitic, arrogant, prideful, ignorant illusion of superiority.

Distortion deepens. Dysfunction multiplies. Self-victimization becomes a cultural paradigm identity. Pettiness, bitterness, shame, envy, jealousy, and guilt consume individuals collectively.

Instead of turning inward, they externalize their inner child wounds. They scapegoat. They project. They avoid. They gaslight. They Undermine.

Avoiding the one thing that could liberate them: Honest, conscious self-observation. To sit with one's own thoughts, intentions, emotions, habits, and behaviors without distortion.

To face the layers of self-conditioning rooted in divisive beliefs, ideologies, dogmas, and cultural paradigms and attachments. To recognize the fragmented curated identities built on stagnation, fear, status, titles, ranks, and inherited delusional self-serving hollow narratives.

Instead, the majority remain bound, subservient to external authority, worshiping external deities, waiting for something or someone to save them from the very darkness they create, curate, perpetuate, and resist learning from.

But self-liberation demands something deeper. The courage to sit with discomfort. To feel without judgment. To observe without labeling. To accept what it is as it is without seeking control.

To alchemize dense emotional frequencies into higher states of perception, emotional maturity, and inner coherence, expanding beyond fragmentation into self-integration.

When self-reflection, self-healing, self-regulation, self-sufficiency, self-sovereignty, authenticity, integrity, and inner authority are not cultivated, we perpetuate the illusion.

We cling to identities. We perform hypocritical, morally distorted facades. We repeat conditioned stories, patterns of self-abandoning and self-betrayal behavior left unexamined.

In doing so, we abandon and betray our true, authentic selves, allowing ourselves to be controlled, manipulated, exploited, and diminished by external false authorities that simply mirror what we refuse to acknowledge, recognize, and develop within.

At every moment, we are faced with a choice:

To respond from our higher self...or react from a wounded, disconnected egoic construct.

One path expands, the other contracts.

When we remember who we truly are, we no longer participate, entangle, agree, or consent to our own diminishment. We do not abandon or betray ourselves to please or appease others. We do not outsource our inner peace, our truth, or our authority for the sake of obedience, compliance, or submission.

Inner authority is not granted. It is known, present, and embodied from Authenticity.

It is grounded in a deep, unwavering knowing of the self, independent of culture, ideology, dogma, or societal paradigms.

A sovereign soul does not seek validation, acceptance, or approval externally.

It is rooted within.

Self-assured.

Self-validated.

Self-regulated.

Self-sufficient.

Self-accountable.

Navigating the human experience with an open heart and an open mind, without diluting itself.

We are not at the same level of consciousness. We walk at different stages of the same infinite path. When we compare, compete, judge, or seek to diminish others from a place of prideful, entitled, avoidant, arrogant ignorance, we diminish ourselves.

Because what we project outward...returns.

Inevitably. Undeniably. Always in divine order.

We are not victims of life until we choose to abandon and betray our true, authentic selves to belong, be accepted, be liked, be loved, seeking externally for permission and being dependent on a hollow parasitic hierarchical status quo, and others expectations, approval for existence.
