

The Ponzi Illusion in Narcissistic Transactional Societies that Commodify Humanness through the Currency of Self-Betrayal

by Pedro Lima

In narcissistic, parasitic, transactional, and commodified soulless societies, individuals strive to possess, to control, to dominate, to be ahead, profiting at any cost from others.

They curate fragmented, hollow, self-preserving identities. They perform out of falsehood. They dress to impress. They speak empty words to please, appease, and soothe fragile egos.

All to gather attention. Followers. “Sheeples” are attached to external validation, approval, and acceptance just to survive.

A karmic cycle where individuals become enslaved by egoic parasitic hollow attachments, self-avoidance, clinging to unresolved trauma, fear, and unworthiness, distracted by illusionary performative surface-level falsehoods that sell an identity, dreams of wealth, status, and power built on “stuff.”

The majority agrees. Participates. Entangle themselves with those who do not have their best interest at heart, who seek to harvest their life-force, their inner authority, their inner authentic sovereign essence.

Keeping them in line, dependent. Obedient. Subservient. Compliant. Submissive. Self-abandoning. Self-betraying. Just to belong.

This is a narcissistic, soulless, distorted, and dysfunctional hollow club. A parasitic club built on control, deception, manipulation, scams, speculation, and hierarchical Ponzi structures of false power. A hollow, desolated societal landscape consumed by spiritual ignorance and impoverishment.

Where: Greed is normalized. Profit comes first. Human well-being comes last. It is carefully curated, institutionalized, legislated, and indoctrinated at all levels of society. A surface-level, curated, and fragmented soulless reality lacking: Self-awareness. Self-honesty. Self-discernment. Self-love. Self-healing. Self-integration. Self-accountability. Integrity.

A spiritually impoverished societal system driven by fear and scarcity, where individuals chase accumulation to fill an inner emptiness that cannot be filled externally. No matter how much they hoard. Consume. Achieve. Take from others. They remain disconnected from their own inner abundance.

Afraid of their own darkness. Afraid of vulnerability, because it would expose the egoic-mind illusion behind their curated, fragmented performative identity.

Within this distorted Ponzi societal structure, individuals willingly self-abandon to participate. They obey. They comply. They outsource their inner authority to false external authorities.

Supporting systems of domination and control, extracting from others to sustain illusions of power and security, corporate hollow careers, and hierarchical rank ladders.

Where diminishing others becomes normalized. Necessary. Rewarded. Celebrated. When the illusions collapse, the majority scapegoat the system they upheld. But the truth remains: A parasitic system only survives through individual and collective agreement. Through participation. Through consent, both conscious and unconscious.

The parasitic control, exploitation, and domination projected outward are reflections of an inner chaotic world that has not been confronted, harmonized, integrated, and accepted. A collective that normalizes self-victimization. That bows to systems that diminish them, that demand self-betrayal in exchange for survival, and an identity, a place to belong. Trading: Integrity for security. Truth for approval. Sovereignty for belonging.

Living at the mercy of perceived authorities, “gurus,” “masters,” “leaders,” “experts,” “middlemen so-called leaders” who filter reality to soothe egos, offering comfort instead of truth, offer mind relief to the majority instead of taking self-responsibility.

But here is the fracture point: Nothing about this system is sustainable without your participation. Nothing about it holds power without your agreement. The moment you stop seeking validation...stop performing...stop outsourcing your inner authority...authentic sovereign raw truth, the illusion begins to collapse.

Because a being who no longer needs approval cannot be controlled. A being who sees clearly from within cannot be dependent and manipulated. A being who stands in truth cannot be exploited.

No system binds you more than the one you refuse to see within yourself. Because self-liberation is not rebellion against the external, it is the refusal to abandon, betray, and deceive yourself internally.

The moment you reclaim your discernment, your authenticity, your integrity, your inner authority, your presence in truth, you become incompatible with parasitic distortion and dysfunction. Not because the system disappears...but because you no longer resonate with it.
