

The Illusion of Wealth in a Spiritually Bankrupt Societal Parasitic System

By Pedro Lima

Wealth and success in a narcissistic, commodified, parasitic, surface-level society are defined, labeled, categorized, and measured by the level of addiction, obsessions and attachments to scarcity, speculation, and victimization.

It is a relentless pursuit to justify self-conditioning, curated stories, identities, and preconceived indoctrinated roles that lead individuals to actively and passively participate in the normalization, institutionalization, and culturalization of control, deception, manipulation, and exploitation in order to gain leverage over others.

They are praised, rewarded, and celebrated based on the amount of titles, rank, possessions hoarded, money accumulated, number of followers, subscribers, sponsors, and subscriptions; hollow metrics that measure, approve, and validate their perceived level of worth, success, fame, and influence within a codependent, spiritually impoverished societal landscape.

A landscape that lacks inner substance.

Inner alignment. Authentic sovereignty. Inner authority. Self-discernment. Self-regulation. Self-healing. Self-acceptance.

In this hollow shallow commodified societal system, climbing hierarchical ranks, maintaining cosmetic appearances, performing curated, fragmented, deceptive, and hypocritical moral facades, and accumulating material excess are elevated as the perceived as the highest pinnacle of power, status, control, dominance, and success.

Knowledge becomes gatekept, accessible only to those positioned at the top of this Ponzi-like societal hierarchy.

Meanwhile, ignorance is glorified and normalized among the majority, individuals who choose self-abandonment, self-betrayal, and self-deception to soothe the egos of others.

They please. They obey. They comply. They outsource self-authority, self-sufficiency, self-accountability, self-sovereignty, self-reliance.

All while remaining attached and bound to distorted, parasitic societal projections and dysfunctional patterns rooted in inner chaos.

This parasitic commodified societal dysfunctional system reveals itself in everyday dynamics:

Corporations exploiting human attention and emotional triggers and addictions to maximize profit, turning distraction into dependency.

Influencers selling curated illusions of success while masking inner emptiness and insecurity.

Financial systems built on speculation, manipulation, and artificial engineered scarcity, rewarding those who extract, and exploit rather than create from a self-regulated and self-sufficiency inner state.

The acceptance and participation in work environments that glorify burnout, stress, overproduction, profit-based performance, and compliance while disconnecting individuals from purpose and self-worth.

Creation of social platforms that amplify outrage, deception, manipulation, propaganda, censorship, division, and comparison, conditioning individuals to measure their value through external validation and clapping.

Deception becomes a strategy.

Manipulation becomes a skill.

Exploitation becomes normalized, and dishonesty when profitable is rebranded as cunning intelligence and “business as usual”.

But this parasitic distorted and dysfunctional societal illusion has limits.

True wealth is not accumulated externally, it is cultivated internally. It is built through self-awareness. Refined through self-discipline, self-discernment. Strengthened through self-regulation. Expanded through self-knowledge. Anchored in self-trust.

A sovereign, self-sufficient authentic being does not depend on external validation to feel abundant, fulfilled and whole.

They generate it from within. Their clarity becomes currency. Their integrity becomes influence. Their inner peace becomes power.

Knowledge is no longer something granted, it is something realized, self-actualized.

Wisdom is no longer something self-contained, conditioned by the external world, it is embodied in authentic sovereign presence, and from this inner foundation frequency state, abundance flows outward naturally, not as a source of performance, not as accumulation, but grounded in inner alignment.

Because when an individual is no longer empty within, they no longer need to extract, exploit, or harvest from the world to feel whole.

They become a sovereign, authentic source, that is the kind of wealth no societal narcissistic surface-level commodified parasitic copycat system can define, measure, control, corrupt, or take away.

I do not settle for any of the illusions that narcissistic surface-level commodified societies indoctrinate as comfort, normal, convenient, striving for mediocrity. My Soul is not for sale.
