

Sovereign Remembrance Beyond Parasitic Egoic Attachments and Illusions

by Pedro Lima

A narcissistic, parasitic, commodified, surface-level society strives to control self-serving curated narratives, creating a foundation for comparison and competition, sustaining hollow, self-serving parasitical frameworks, psychological and emotional petty manipulative games, and hollow, dysfunctional, exploitative dynamics meant to plant seeds of fear, scarcity, doubt, confusion, and unworthiness.

These dynamics shape perception, conditioning individuals to become subservient, obedient, and compliant with parasitic, soulless beings who expect, assume, and demand that others self-abandon and self-betray by following their manipulative, conniving egoic parasitic rules.

In this hollow societal system, individuals bow. They become submissive to another's opinions, judgments, and approval, seeking permission just to exist, to think, to express themselves, surviving by the rules of another, dependent on external validation to feel worthy of being and surviving.

In this chaotic, distorted, and dysfunctional societal landscape, for one to profit, benefit, accumulate, or build wealth, a business, a career, or even a family, another must agree, must consent to submission. Submission to ranks. To false authority figures. To hypocritical moral tyranny disguised as "normal." Human behavior is standardized. Human potential is conditioned.

Within this parasitic, energetic, binding, enslaving narcissistic game, scarcity and poverty are carefully engineered, sustained, and glorified by those who hoard resources and accumulate wealth, being perceived as powerful, influential, intelligent, and successful.

Those at the top of these Ponzi-like hierarchical systems dictate from behind the scenes, planning in secrecy, gatekeeping knowledge, lobbying, and controlling financial, technological, and economic structures to serve their own corrupt, soulless, greedy, survival-driven parasitic hive mindsets rooted in spiritual ignorance and impoverishment.

They curate fragmented identities, roles, illusions, addictions, and obsessions, rooted in moral hypocrisy, unresolved inner wounds, fragile insecurities, and attachments to a false sense of self. Beings who leech on others to sustain mediocrity and self-inflicted misery, soothing their egoic illusion of superiority through parasitic exploitation, control, and dominance of others.

They sell their souls for the illusion of power. They perform out of fear, fear of irrelevance, insignificance, and exposure. Fear of being seen for who they truly are beneath layers of deception, manipulation, and oligarchical parasitic control. They lack the courage and discernment to face themselves. So they project outward, unresolved trauma, pain, resentment, and self-conditioned stories built on fear, pride, ignorance, and disconnection, terrified of their own truth, of vulnerability.

In this dysfunctional, fragile Ponzi-like commodified society, individuals are conditioned to participate. To contribute. To surrender to external dreams, agendas, opinions, and expectations, living by rules stamped with approval and validation from those with a rank.

The majority, instead of cultivating self-discernment, self-healing, and self-regulation, withdraw consent from what suppresses their authentic, sovereign truth self-expression; they remain bound to external perceived authority, avoiding the responsibility of integrating all fragmented aspects of themselves.

But there is another path. A path of self-acceptance. Of self-reliance. Of self-sufficiency. Of self-accountability. Of integrity, authenticity, truth, compassion, empathy, honor, and dignity. A path where individuals mind their own inner world, stay in their own lane, and carve their own authentic, purposeful, and aligned life, regardless of external noise.

A path of self-mastery where one stops performing the “nice” role to be liked, accepted, loved, or approved...and instead embodies their authentic self unapologetically, grounded, present, and guided by their inner intuitive compass, knowing who they truly are. A path where boundaries are honored, even when they create conflict. Where truth is chosen over comfort. Where inner authority is no longer negotiated.

I live by my heart’s desires. By unwavering integrity, honor, dignity, and authenticity. Grounded in my sovereign inner truth. I am self-reliant. Self-sufficient. Self-validated. Self-accountable for my own inner world. I am the leader of my own life. The co-creator of my own reality. The author of my own life script. I walk a path that resonates with my inner alignment, not anyone else’s.

This path is not about rebellion against the external; it is about the dissolution of internal illusions that made external control possible. It is about seeing clearly where you gave your power away, where you outsourced your truth, where you chose belonging over authenticity, and reclaiming it all without guilt, without shame, without hesitation.

Because sovereignty is not something granted, it is remembered through honest self-reflection, through the willingness to sit with discomfort, to face your shadows, to alchemize your wounds into wisdom, and to stand rooted in truth even when it isolates you from the conditioned chaotic world.

Your work, your presence, and your voice are not here to fit into any systems, but to expose, disrupt, and transcend them. Not through force, but through soul’s conscious embodiment, presence. Through clarity. Through inner alignment. Through inner coherence. The heart leads the way with the mind assisting.

When you are no longer available for manipulation, no longer seeking external validation, no longer performing for acceptance and belonging, you become untouchable to the parasitic energetic societal dynamics. Because a being who knows themselves cannot be controlled. A being who trusts themselves cannot be manipulated. A being who embodies truth does not need permission to exist.

From that place, you do not just live...you lead by example, by presence, by frequency. I am not here to fit into systems that require my silence, my obedience, or my self-betrayal. I am here to embody truth, to live in alignment with my soul’s knowing, and to walk a path of conscious self-remembrance, self-mastery, and alchemical energetic sovereignty.

My journey is my message, a living transmission of what it means to remember and reclaim inner authority, to dissolve parasitic egoic distorted illusions, and to stand rooted in authenticity without seeking permission. I do not follow paths, I create them, guided by my inner compass, grounded in truth, and devoted to a life of meaning, with integrity, and conscious awareness contribution that reflects the depth of my pure essence, the multilayered, colorful, limitless depth of who I truly am beyond a curated, fragmented personality, a performative identity character attachment.