

The Engineered Social Polite Lie - Nice on the Surface, False at the Core

by Pedro Lima

In curated, fragmented, narcissistic, commodified, fear-based, scarcity-engineered, surface-level oligarchical parasitic mob-like societies, everything is inverted.

The Curated Polite, Pretending, and Be Nice fake game is socially played. Victimization is rewarded. Control, Enforcement, Exploitation, and oppression are normalized, deception and corruption are institutionalized, and manipulation is disguised as a hierarchical authority structure, order, security, justice, and social necessity.

Lies, betrayal, speculation, corruption, exploitation, domination, parasitism, secrecy, hierarchy, authority, oligarchy, laws, norms, and policies are all built upon indoctrinated shame and guilt-tripping petty frameworks, social engineered game where people play nice to avoid the “elephant in the room”, curating fragmented self-serving identities, moral hypocritical facades, delusional narratives, stories, ideologies, dogmas, and cultural paradigms designed to maintain control and subjugation of others to false authorities.

The societal indoctrinated compliant frameworks are not rooted in truth, integrity, or to sustain individual sovereign authentic self-expression, but engineered to fragment perception, to trigger conditioning, to instigate division, to sustain conflict, to hoard and profit from human disconnection, subservience, and ignorance.

They feed on addiction, obsession, ignorance, dependency, and the attachment to pain-based, fragmented, curated identities, so individuals begin to outsource their responsibility for self-regulation, self-discernment, and self-sufficiency, to be self-led, to take self-accountability for the energies that they choose to cultivate and that resonate with their inner authentic core values.

They attach their identity, their worth, their trust, their self-sufficiency, their inner voice, and their direction to people and parasitic hierarchical systems outside of them.

They silence their inner knowing. They suppress their intuitive compass. They dim their truth to belong, to be accepted, to be liked, praised, and validated.

They perform. They comply. They appease. All at the cost of self-abandonment. All at the cost of self-betrayal.

A false self fragmented mask is maintained through the savior and martyr roles, while the individual remains internally disconnected, lacking the discernment and courage to set boundaries with anything that demands obedience, subservience, submission, and compliance.

They wait for permission to exist. Permission to speak. Permission to choose.

Living according to external expectations, opinions, rules, norms, oligarchical, manipulative, and self-serving laws, assumptions, and judgments, instead of cultivating self-trust, self-reliance, self-validation, and inner authority.

But the path out is not external. It is the willingness to turn inward and face everything that has been avoided.

To observe your thoughts, your intentions, your reactions, your patterns. To take full accountability for your inner world.

To feel without escaping. To process without projecting. To sit with discomfort without numbing or rationalizing it.

No more “why me?” No more running. Just presence. Awareness. Alchemical integration.

You begin to see clearly the layers of conditioning, the egoic self-preserving, fragmented, curated identities, the pain-based narratives, the karmic loops reinforced through unconscious patterns of choices and repeated behaviors.

Because what you embody...you perpetuate. What you perpetuate...you experience.

No belief system, no law, no curated identity tied to a nationality, no external authority will shield you from the consequences of the energy you choose to live from.

Spiritual ignorance is not accidental; it is normalized, legalized, and institutionalized in a hollow, self-serving, narcissistic, fear-based, subservient society that thrives on inner disconnection and spiritual impoverishment.

A system that commodifies human beings. That engineers scarcity, division, and conflict. That profits from stress, distraction, survival mode, and inner emptiness.

It sustains itself through individual and collective agreement. Through attention. Through participation. Through unconscious consent.

Individuals who refuse to honestly self-reflect, who cling to victimhood, who avoid self-accountability, become the very fuel that feeds and defends the parasitic narcissistic oligarchical imperialistic petty hierarchical structures they claim to suffer under.

They remain distracted. Pressed. Bound by bills, taxes. Busy. Overstimulated. Overanalyzing. Inner disconnected. Surviving...but never truly living authentically and with purpose.

Meanwhile, those who seek power through control and subjugation rely on this state of inner disconnection and spiritual ignorance.

The moment you withdraw your attention from what binds you...The moment you stop feeding what diminishes you...The moment you reclaim your inner authority...everything begins to shift.

You stop asking for permission. You stop outsourcing your truth. You stop aligning with narratives that were never yours. You begin to live authentically from within.

Grounded. Aware. Self-led. Sovereign. Not reacting to distortion, but alchemizing it. Not escaping discomfort, but integrating it. Protecting your energy. Honoring your boundaries.

Standing firm in your authentic sovereign truth without the need to explain, justify, or convince.

Because you no longer belong to systems that require your self-betrayal to function.

You belong to yourself, and from that perception, inner state...nothing external has authority over you unless you give it.

To disrupt the fake, curated, fragmented hollow societal politeness is not through loud rebellion, but uncompromising authenticity.

In a world conditioned to reward fakeness, lies, and politeness over truth, performance over presence, and agreement over integrity, choosing to express yourself honestly, authentically, and with unwavering integrity becomes a radical, disruptive social act.

It is not about being reckless or reactive, but grounded in one's intuitive compass guidance, self-discerning, and self-led.

You speak because it is true, not because it is convenient, or playing nice to soothe others egos.

You stand in your authenticity without the need to soften it to protect fragile illusions or to be accepted by those committed to fakeness.

You no longer participate in conversations, environments, or dynamics that require you to dilute your truth or silence your authentic sovereign voice to maintain false harmony.

Instead, you embody honesty with self-discernment, courage with presence, and clarity with integrity, knowing that real connection is not built through playing nice, but through being real, and in that choice, you become unavailable for playing the illusory societal game, only fully available for exchanges with those who are present, embodying their genuine, authentic sovereign truth.
