

The Collective Agreement and Participation in their own Psychological Enslavement

By Pedro Lima

A self-victimized, suppressed, dependent collective, complains, blames, projects, and scapegoats the very systems that control, censor, exploit, deceive, manipulate, surveil, oppress, and psychologically condition them, while simultaneously supporting, obeying, complying with, defending, financing, and emotionally depending upon those same parasitic oligarchical hierarchical Ponzi structures for identity, security, survival, justice, order, validation, and permission to exist.

While performing the role of the powerless victim, a docile collective externalize their lack of self-accountability, avoiding the uncomfortable truth that corrupt systems continue to exist because collective agreement, consent, comfort, complacency, fear, dependency, and unconscious participation continuously feed them energy, attention, labor, obedience, and legitimacy.

Entire societal frameworks are created to benefit, harvest, and profit from humanity's attachments to pain, suffering, fear, scarcity, conflict, division, emotional dependency, indoctrinated programming, curated fragmented survival identities, and the normalization of self-abandonment and self-betrayal disguised as "responsibility," "normality," and as necessary for "survival."

Even when truth exposes the people and the system engineered deception, corruption, manipulation, propaganda, psychological conditioning, and the distorted agendas hidden beneath institutional hypocritical hollow facades, the majority still bury their heads in the sand, pretending nothing happened.

The numb collective continues outsourcing their inner authority, discernment, and sovereignty to corrupt institutions, media systems, corporations, false authority figures, and bureaucratic hollow frameworks that exploit, diminish, surveil, enforce, coerce, lobby, and psychologically domesticate them.

A spiritually numb collective still calls this "freedom," while remaining trapped inside greedy, hierarchical, corrupt systems that profit from labor exploitation, engineered scarcity, debt slavery, emotional conditioning, performative self-preserving curated identities, addictions, distractions, fear-based survival programming designed to keep consciousness docile, obedient, compliant, fragmented, exhausted, and externally dependent.

In this hollow surface-level societal landscape, suffering becomes normalized because individuals become conditioned to cling to what is familiar, even when what is familiar continuously diminishes their spirit, authenticity, creativity, emotional well-being, and sovereign essence.

Humanity becomes trapped inside self-imprisoned fear-based minds, invisible conditioned energetic barriers to believe that life itself is meant to be transactional, emotionally exhausting, spiritually disconnected, and rooted in endless consumerism, comparison, and competition to survive.

But the soul cannot genuinely awaken while endlessly blaming the external world without honestly confronting its own participation within it. Soul remembrance begins the moment an individual courageously turns inward and asks:

Where have I abandoned myself to belong, survive, or feel accepted?

What fears keep me emotionally attached to systems, identities, behaviors, and beliefs that diminish my authentic nature?

What part of me still seeks comfort inside familiar suffering rather than transformation through truth?

Do I genuinely desire freedom, or only a more comfortable version of dependency?

What addictions, distractions, emotional patterns, and conditioned attachments keep me disconnected from my own inner knowing?

Who would I become if I stopped outsourcing my worth, authority, identity, and truth to the external world?

Can I sit honestly with my own shadows without projection, blame, avoidance, or self-deception?

Can I consciously choose integrity, discernment, authenticity, accountability, and soul alignment even if it means walking away from collective approval, comfort, and conditioned familiarity?

Because the path back to self-sovereignty is not found through obedience to anyone or any external systems, but through the inner alchemical courage to reclaim self-awareness, self-responsibility, discernment, emotional maturity, and the eternal authentic truth already waiting within the soul that is unconsciously suppressed beneath every layer of fear, conditioning, illusion, and fragmentation.

Individual and collective transformation does not begin when humanity waits for saviors or corrupt systems to suddenly develop integrity, conscience, or compassion.

It begins the moment individuals consciously stop feeding, defending, normalizing, financing, obeying, and emotionally depending on exploitative, centralized, corrupt, hollow, parasitic structures that survive through fear, scarcity, division, manipulation, and collective psychological submission.

Every soul that remembers and reclaims self-awareness, self-accountability, discernment, emotional maturity, self-sufficiency, and inner sovereignty weakens the energetic foundation sustaining parasitic systems built upon human disconnection and dependency.

Societal change becomes inevitable when enough individuals stop outsourcing their inner authority, stop participating in self-betrayal for comfort or belonging, and begin cultivating conscious communities rooted in truth, genuine, authentic reciprocity, compassion, sustainability, integrity, cooperation, and authentic human connection.

Because no external parasitic system can genuinely enslave a collective that has remembered its own sovereign essence, inner discernment, and the sacred interconnected power of conscious human beings aligned from within, autonomous, soul-led.
