

Soul Remembrance Beyond Narcissistic Hierarchical Psychological and Emotional Human Conditioning

by Pedro Lima

A disempowered, docile, fake, complacent, obedient, compliant, subservient, and submissive collective does not cultivate authentic sovereign truth, integrity, honor, dignity, genuine compassion, empathy, conscious collaboration, or mutually reciprocal human connection.

Instead, it normalizes self-gain, manipulative, deceptive, speculative, Ponzi, transactional, psychologically binding, and emotionally parasitic dynamics rooted in fear, scarcity, control, leverage, possession, domination, and self-serving fragmented survival identities.

Within these hollow, Ponzi, societal, hierarchical, corrupt structures, individuals consciously and unconsciously curate false personas and performative identities to preserve fragile, fear-based senses of self and security built upon validation-seeking, comparison, status, hierarchy, emotional dependency, and external approval.

Corrupt societal frameworks become designed to sustain powerlessness, dependency, obedience, compliance, submission, and psychological domestication and subjugation, benefiting hollow, fragmented individuals consumed by greed, insecurity, mediocrity, self-misery, fear of insignificance, irrelevance, curating deep inner emptiness with external possessions.

Unable to cultivate genuine inner wholeness, they seek expansion externally through control, surveillance, subscriptions, followers, manipulation, domination, exploitation, and the diminishing of another being's inherent sovereignty, authenticity, intuitive intelligence, and self-expression.

These distorted, insecure, and fragile individuals attempt to portray themselves as superior, godlike, authoritative, or above others in order to maintain the illusion of power over those who unconsciously abandon themselves for belonging, safety, comfort, validation, status, or survival.

Within this dysfunctional, chaotic, narcissistic, hierarchical, externally dependent collective, people become conditioned to trust, obey, defend, finance, compare, compete, and psychologically attach themselves to the very corrupt corporate-based hollow systems and figures that exploit, harvest, diminish, manipulate, domesticate, and emotionally fragment them.

Entire societal systems become structured around the glorification of subservience and obedience to hollow thrones curated by hollow, petty, insecure kings, rewarding manipulation over integrity, curated appearances, performance over authenticity, greed over compassion, obedience over discernment, conformity over self-awareness, and dependency over sovereign self-sufficiency.

What manifests externally within spiritually impoverished, profit-driven, transactional, surface-level societies is ultimately a reflection of the collective inner world.

A society rooted in self-abandonment, self-deception, fear, shame, greed, comparison, emotional suppression, and avoidance inevitably creates external systems mirroring the same fragmentation, distortion, corruption, attachments to divisive ideologies, dogmas, cultural paradigms, and spiritual disconnection.

Individuals become trapped inside curated pain-based identities and inherited conditioning because honestly confronting the inner world requires humility, courage, patience, forgiveness, accountability, emotional maturity, self-awareness, and the willingness to dissolve false identities constructed around fear, lack, and survival.

Instead of listening to their own intuitive compass and authentic inner truth, they become consumed by performative fake behavior, external validation, image-fragmented self-preservation, and the exhausting need to maintain hollow appearances within systems that reward illusion over genuine self-expression.

At the deepest level, humanity continuously experiences the energetic consequences of what it collectively cultivates within consciousness itself.

What we repeatedly nourish through thought, intention, emotional attachment, action, fear, resentment, manipulation, dishonesty, or unconscious participation and consent, will manifest outwardly through our relationships, distorted, dysfunctional, chaotic, spiritually impoverished societies, corrupt surveilling, controlling institutions, and greedy hollow corporations.

No individual can endlessly project, deceive, manipulate, exploit, or avoid themselves without self-confronting the energetic weight of what they have cultivated within their own inner world.

We may romanticize suffering, glorify victimhood, worship external saviors, seek distractions, numb ourselves through addictions, obsessions, possessions, cling to familiar pain, or strive to justify distorted narcissistic parasitic behavior through societal normalization, but we cannot escape the deeper universal reality that every soul must sit with the unresolved energies, wounds, intentions, fears, and fragmented aspects it avoids and refuses, to consciously acknowledge, integrate, heal, and transform.

The soul does not evolve through curated appearances, surface-level performance, hollow domination, insecure comparison, distorted control, manipulation, attachments to titles, status, or hollow dependency upon external authority figures and systems.

It evolves through conscious self-remembrance, discernment, humility, integrity, honor, dignity, empathy, assertive boundaries, self-sovereignty, emotional integration, accountability, compassion, inner coherence, and the courageous willingness to remain authentic within a world rewarding inner fragmentation and curated survival illusions.

Self-sovereignty arises when an individual consciously stops negotiating their integrity for belonging, stops abandoning themselves to preserve false connections, and withdraws energetic agreement from systems, relationships, and identities that require self-betrayal in exchange for comfort, validation, survival, or approval.

Because authentic Soul essence and presence cannot be psychologically harvested, spiritually domesticated, emotionally owned, replicated, bought, manipulated, or controlled once a soul fully remembers the eternal truth of what it already was, is, and always will be beneath every layer of conditioning, fear, illusion, fragmentation, dysfunction, and inherited distortion.
