

The Domestication of Human Consciousness Through Currencies of Fear, Hollow Status, and Self-Abandonment for the sake of Belonging

by Pedro Lima

A narcissistic, victimized, codependent, fear-conditioned, hive-minded society continuously generates thoughts, beliefs, intentions, actions, and decisions rooted in scarcity, comparison, competition, division, control, hierarchical corporate, subordinative, subversive, lobbyist, parasitic, greedy, profit-driven Ponzi scheme, and survival.

It strives to categorize, label, divide, measure, and define everything and everyone, not to understand life more deeply, but to micromanage, predict, and control outcomes, secure advantage, leverage over others, protect fragile fragmented insecure identities, and maintain parasitic, bureaucratic, hollow inflated petty delusional rulers and corrupt systems of human life-force and planet resources extraction, influence, domination, hoarding and exploitation.

To sustain itself, it manufactures fear-based compelling narratives, engineers distractions, amplifies division, glorifies hierarchies and keeps individuals occupied comparing themselves to others, competing for status, fighting over resources, defending ideologies, dogmas, cultural paradigms, corrupt, soulless, hollow corporate-profit driven, greedy, grifter exploitative actions worshipping personalities, science middleman “gurus”, “masters”, and “deities” perceived as above and beyond authority figures and attaching themselves to fragmented identities that provide temporary certainty in an uncertain world.

It elevates fake hollow performance above authenticity, appearance above inner substance, conformity above sovereign self-discernment, and social approval and acceptance above inner truth, and self-validation grounded in their own inner intuitive compass, wisdom, and knowing.

Within this distorted, dysfunctional, transactional, commodified, domesticated consciousness landscape, individuals construct carefully curated personas designed to attract admiration, influence, sympathy, attention, power, validation, or belonging.

Hollow charisma replaces genuine, intuitive, authentic character. Curated image replaces integrity. Symbolism replaces wisdom. Surface-level appearances become currencies traded within transactionally spiritually impoverished societal environments where value is determined by usefulness, performance, influence, status, leverage, and perception management rather than authenticity, honesty, integrity, compassion, humility, self-accountability, or self-awareness.

The majority willingly abandon and betray their own discernment to gain entry into exclusive circles, hierarchical structures, ideological tribes, institutions, organizations, and social club orders that promise importance, power, recognition, protection, or advancement. Yet these environments often demand blindfolded obedience, subservience, compliance, and silence over individual authentic truth-self-expression; obedience over integrity; conformity over individuality; and participation in behaviors that compromise authenticity in exchange for dependence, acceptance, and subsistence. The price of belonging becomes self-abandonment, inner disconnection.

Beneath all the titles, rituals, secrecy, symbols, status, and displays of performative false authority lies a profound spiritual emptiness.

A fragile sense of self seeks external validation to compensate for internal disconnection. Pride disguises insecurity. Superiority masks inadequacy. Domination conceals fear. Control attempts to compensate for the lack of courage and self-responsibility to alchemize inner chaos.

The relentless pursuit of hollow power, influence, recognition, and status becomes an individual and collective unconscious effort to outrun unresolved inner wounds, unexamined fears, emotional immaturity, and the terrifying possibility of feeling insignificant, irrelevant, or unseen.

These fragmented, curated conditional identities become prisons of their own making. Individuals become consumed by maintaining appearances, protecting self-preserving narratives, defending illusions, and preserving carefully constructed personas while remaining increasingly disconnected from their authentic nature.

What appears powerful externally is sustained by inner fear, dependency, insecurity, and the desperate need to avoid confronting the aspects of self that remain unresolved, unintegrated, and unaccepted.

A spiritually impoverished, low-consciousness society reveals itself through recurring patterns of thought, intention, and behavior.

It glorifies acquisition, possession, monopoly, domination, and control while neglecting self-respect, self-dignity, integrity, compassion, empathy, and wisdom.

It rewards manipulation while dismissing integrity. It monetizes attention while starving soul presence.

It confuses external authority, popularity, or “herd” approval, with truth, visibility with value, and dominance with strength. Individuals become conditioned to seek external validation instead of inner alignment, inner coherence, external authority instead of self-discernment, and external identity instead of authentic sovereign selfhood.

In this hollow, dysfunctional, narcissistic self-victimized societal surface-level environments, emotional reactivity replaces self-reflection, tribal allegiance replaces individual neutrality, individual inner knowing and wisdom, outrage replaces inner understanding, and consumption replaces genuine inner fulfillment.

The surface-level commodified collective becomes trapped in an endless cycle of distraction, comparison, performance, and dependency, unconsciously feeding the very systems that perpetuate its fragmentation, enslavement, and domestication.

But beneath all the layers of conditioning remains the sovereign essence of the soul, waiting patiently to be remembered by those willing to remember, see beyond fragmented illusions, confront themselves honestly, and reclaim the truth that no hierarchy, ideology, dogma, middleman-savior-figures, institution, title, or external authority can ever provide.
