

I Choose Authenticity over Hive-Minded Conformity Societal Fear-based Scripts

By Pedro Lima

I have learned to see people clearly for what they consciously and unconsciously choose to become, without needing to understand, justify, excuse, or decode why they have chosen to embody artificial, performative, egoic, insecure, fragile, leveraged identities.

I no longer need to understand someone's conditioning in order to recognize what their choices reveal.

I can have compassion without abandoning self-discernment.

I can understand without excusing or tolerating their disrespect.

I can keep my heart open without keeping the door open to what repeatedly violates my inner truth, and assertive, discerning, sacred, uncompromising boundaries.

I am not afraid to cut anyone off when they consciously choose to lie, deceive, manipulate, control, harm, gossip, try to bring me down, project ill intent, undermine, diminish, or attempt to destabilize my inner peace, authentic sovereign truth, and inner authority.

Walking away is not punishment. Keeping distance is not revenge. Withdrawal is not arising from hatred.

Sometimes it is simply the conscious withdrawal of my attention, consent, participation, and sacred energy from dynamics that no longer honor and resonate with the integrity of who I am.

I do not believe that everyone deserves unlimited access to me simply because they are desperately asking for another chance.

I do not need to give second, third, fourth, or endless chances to individuals who repeatedly demonstrate dishonesty, inauthenticity, deception, manipulation, and a lack of integrity, honor, dignity, and willingness to take responsibility for how they choose to relate to me.

Trust is not demanded. It is cultivated.

Respect is not negotiated through entitlement. It is demonstrated through consistent, heart-coherent behavior.

Integrity is not something we claim. It is something we embody when nobody is watching.

I do not give my attention, consent, or participation to parasitic, delusional, hive-minded, insecure, egoic, distorted, dysfunctional, narcissistic relational dynamics at any level.

I no longer confuse emotional dependency with love.

I no longer confuse neediness and possession with connection.

I no longer confuse control with care.

I no longer confuse manipulation with intimacy.

I no longer confuse self-abandonment with compassion.

I no longer believe that keeping someone in my life is evidence of how loving, forgiving, or evolved I am.

I do not seek anyone to complete me. Anyone. I cultivate self-independence. Self-love. Self-trust. Self-compassion. Self-forgiveness. Self-awareness. Self-sufficiency. Self-inspiration. Self-abundance. Inner creativity. Self-acceptance.

I am not looking outside myself for another human being to complete what I have the responsibility to cultivate within myself.

I can love deeply without becoming dependent.

I can connect profoundly without becoming entangled, subservient, and submissive.

I can be vulnerable without surrendering self-discernment.

I can give without abandoning myself.

I can receive without becoming entitled.

I can genuinely care without becoming responsible for another person's inner world state.

I only allow genuine, authentic, sovereign, respectful, truthful, reciprocal, and trustworthy soul-to-soul connections into the deeper spaces of my life.

I do not entertain or entangle myself with any individuals who continuously demand access to my energy while refusing to take responsibility for their own inner world, emotional unresolved patterns, choices, intentions, and behavior.

I am not for everyone, and I am completely at peace with that.

I no longer need universal consensus or acceptance to validate my existence.

I value authentic, raw connections where human beings are not afraid to embrace vulnerability without egoic, dysfunctional, artificial, performative identities, invisible leverage, insecure, egoic, manipulative strings attached.

I want depth without possession. Vulnerability without manipulation. Intimacy without control. Truth without artificial performance. Connection without self-abandonment. Reciprocity without transaction. Freedom without emotional irresponsibility.

I set clear, unwavering, assertive, and discerning boundaries with anyone who does not have my best interest at heart, regardless of who they are, what position they hold, how long I have known them, what history we share, or what expectations and delusional narratives, inner insecure projections they place upon me.

My boundaries are not invitations for negotiation with people committed to violating them.

They are expressions of self-respect.

I am the sole steward of my sacred energy.

I have the free will and the power of choice to navigate my humanness with conscious awareness, presence, listening, trust, discernment, assertiveness, and integrity.

I listen to my intuitive compass always.

I trust my inner knowing.

I honor my inner wisdom.

I protect my inner peace.

I remain accountable for the consciousness from which I choose to live.

I make choices aligned with my heart coherence, my inner truth, and the life I consciously choose to be the author.

I am the author of my own life.

The writer of my humanness journey's script.

The conscious co-creator of the human experience I am living.

I am not here to make decisions designed to please, appease, impress, or satisfy a hive-minded, numb, spiritually impoverished collective.

I am here to live consciously.

To remain present. To keep my heart open. To learn. To grow. To expand. To heal. To integrate. To evolve.

To ascend beyond the versions of myself that were built through fear, trauma, conditioning, approval, belonging, survival, ancestral and societal inherited beliefs rooted in self-abandonment and self-betrayal.

To find my way back home within myself.

I am not a savior, and I do not need anyone to save me.

My self-independence, self-reliance, self-love, self-trust, self-compassion, self-integrity, self-honor, self-dignity, self-humility, self-assertiveness, self-discernment, self-awareness, self-responsibility, and self-sufficiency are not negotiable.

Not because I believe I am superior to anyone, but because I have understood that abandoning myself to preserve someone else's comfort is still self-abandonment.

Regardless of what unfolds in the world.

Regardless of what anyone else chooses to think, believe, feel, say, project, or judge.

I stand for myself. Always.

I refuse to be swayed by artificial, performative, curated, fragmented, egoic, self-serving identities that attempt to domesticate human consciousness through fear, shame, guilt, tyranny, conformity, dependency, entitlement, control, exploitation, dominance, and psychological and emotional leverage.

I refuse to participate in patterns that demand that I betray my own inner authority simply so another person can remain comfortable inside their own unexamined, distorted, narcissistic, insecure sense of self, and fragmented, curated, performative artificial reality.

I do not need to convince anyone to see what I see.

I do not need to force anyone to change.

I do not need to expose anyone.

I do not need to defeat anyone.

I simply choose where my consciousness, attention, energy, consent, and participation go.

That choice is sacred.

I recognize how unresolved fear, insecurity, fragile pride, entitlement, grandiosity, arrogance, envy, jealousy, resentment, and unexamined wounds can become disguised behind artificial appearances, propaganda, hollow words, curated victimized performative identities, and ulterior motives, but I no longer make it my responsibility to excavate another person's inner world for them.

Their inner world is theirs.

Their choices are theirs.

Their patterns are theirs.

Their consequences are theirs.

My consciousness is mine.

My responsibility is mine.

My sovereignty is mine, and my life is mine to consciously live.

I choose authenticity over artificial hive-minded societal narcissistic performance.

Truth over manipulation.

Integrity over convenience.

Self-respect over social consensus or approval.

Discernment over naïveté.

Inner authority over external permission.

Authentic connection over artificial belonging.

Self-responsibility over victimhood.

Conscious choice over inherited programming, and self-sovereignty over conformity.

I no longer need to participate in the collective artificial egoic dysfunctional narcissistic curated performance simply because it has been marketed as normal.

I question the scripts presented to me as unquestionable truth.

I question the traditions that demand self-betrayal and conformity.

I question the cultural identities enforced through shame and guilt.

I question the paradigms that confuse conformity with belonging.

I question the belief that obedience is a virtue when obedience requires the abandonment and discernment of one's inner authentic sovereign truth.

I question every societal system of thought that asks me to stop listening inwardly so that I can remain programmable and acceptable outwardly.

Because my life does not belong to the collective.

My consciousness does not belong to the collective.

My sacred energy does not belong to the collective.

My inner authority does not belong to the collective.

I will not surrender them simply to become easier to program, easier to control, easier to categorize, easier to understand, easier to domesticate, or easier to accept.

I am not here to become someone else's delusional version of a good human being.

I am here to become fully conscious of the human being I am, and that requires courage.

The courage to disappoint.

The courage to walk away.

The courage to say no.

The courage to remain misunderstood.

The courage to stand alone when necessary.

The courage to love without possessing.

The courage to forgive without reopening the door to accessing my sacred energy.

The courage to remain compassionate without becoming available for exploitation, and petty, delusional, self-serving, fragile, manipulative, leverage-based, artificial narcissistic games.

The courage to keep my heart open without allowing my discernment to close.

This is not about becoming cold. It is about inner clarity.

Not about building walls around my heart, but about becoming conscious of who receives access to it.

Not about rejecting humanity, but about refusing to abandon my humanness in order to belong.

Not about isolation, but about sovereign authentic interconnectedness.

Not about becoming superior, but about becoming self-responsible.

I choose to remain human.

Open-hearted.

Discerned.

Present.

Humble.

Self-accountable.

Self-sovereign.

Self-independent.

I no longer need the hive to tell me who I am.

I no longer need artificial belonging to prove that I belong.

I no longer need another person to complete me.

I no longer need approval to trust my own knowing.

I no longer need to remain where my authenticity is continuously censored, dismissed, and diminished.

I no longer need to betray myself to preserve relationships that require my self-abandonment as their price of entry.

I choose authenticity.

I choose inner authority.

I choose conscious connection.

I choose genuine reciprocity.

I choose integrity.

I choose self-responsibility.

I choose my sacred energy consciously, and above everything else, I choose to remain loyal to the authentic sovereign truth I discover within myself, while keeping my heart open enough to continue learning, growing, expanding, healing, integrating, evolving, and finding my way back home within me.
